Acheron autem dicitur quasi gaudio carens, *That is, wanting joy and comfort, a river so called that is said to receive the souls of the deceased, because that when men are ready to die, a certain saddish astonishment doth so subvert the mind and understanding, that death may easily be discerned to be as hard, for then the conscience and memory of things that be done trouble the mind, which mere Lake, or Marsh must first be passed over, nor can't a mind choose but be mightily perplexed in the searching and examining of their life formerly spent, this river is said to be the son of Ceres, or the earth, because the whole trouble and vexation of the mind ariseth in the care of getting and keeping of riches. This river gave drink to the Titans fighting against Ioue, because many wicked cogitations and thoughts do arise up against the commandments of God, which if the mind shall cherish and give way unto, hee must needs rebell against the Law of God, and become in nature a beast, besides it is said to be of a most bitter taste, because that then the course of our former life being called to account must needs breed bitterness and griefe, vide Nat. Aegæus, αἰγῶν. id est, flu-tus Doricæ, eo quod se in fluctibus deiecit. Neptunus fons, and king of Athens, in whose reign king Minos of Crete, in revenge of his sister Andromeda's death, had made most cruel war on the Athenians, and had set upon them this penalty, that yearly they should send into Crete 7 noble men's children to be devoured of the monster Minotaurus; this penalty had been excused three years, and the fourth year it fell among other to Theseus king Aegæus his eldest son, who being of a noble courage, did put them in great hope to kill the monster, and with much honour escaped the danger, at his departure therefore he had in charge of his father, that if the ships be went in returned properly with good success, that he should set up a white flag in token of victory, and pull down the blacke that they went forth with as monitions, but when Theseus through the counsell of Ariadne, king Minos his daughter, had overcome the monster, and with a clew of thread escaped the labyrinth, setting home againe with great rewards his country, he forgot his father's commandment touching the white flagge: The old prince desirous to see the returne of his sonne, used to goe unto the toppes of an high rocke to see, or view ships comming, & at length having espied his sonnes ships with a blacke flagge as it went out, supposed his sonne had beene slain, and presently threw himselfe from the top of the rocke headlong into the sea, which sea was called afterwards by his name Aegæum, after his death, to comfort his sonne Theseus, he was by the A-

Dante A

Daz, al. Dazē. People of Scythia.

Daci, populi Transylvaniæ.

Dacia. A country of Scythia, beyond Hungary: on the North side it hath Sarmatia Europæa, on the West the Targian: on the South Misia superior: on the East Misia inferior: it is divided into Transylvania, Ziperlandia, Hæcia, Scævia, Septemcæstia, and Bulgaria: It is called by the Germans Sibenburghen, by the Hungarians Herdel. v. Ort. & Steph. Sic. Clim. 7. incolæ Daci dicuntur, qui olim Daci appellati sunt, ex quo apud Athenienses Dacæ nomina plurimula plurimum abundabant, hinc factum est ut in Comædiis serui introducebantur Daci nominati, quo alio nomine Geræ dicti sunt.

Dadyli Idæi, iidem qui Curetes & Corybantes quos Iovem minime ferunt, ne vagitu infans proderetur, nouo lusus genere excogitato, clypeolis æneis inverte concutantes æris tinnitu, & numero pedis compositione (qui inde dadylus dictus est.) Saturnum festellæ, paritque crudelitate, qui filios suos devorare solebat, putrum quævisse, hi prius Phrygiam habuerunt; dein Cretam profecti ferri vltum invenerunt, docueruntque Dadyli modulos, ceptum aut tinnitu æris deprehensos, in verficum ordinem transtulerunt. Cybele Priests: vid. It is also a city of Crete.

Dadalia, n. A city of Italy so called of Dadalus, which builds it, now called Iulia.

Dadalos, gr. δαδάλω. i. artificiosus, a dælo: i. scio: faber Atheniensis Micionis filius. The most ingenious artificer in the world: whence the proverb: Dadali opeta, when we would commend a thing for the curiousness of the work: he invented the saw, the axe, the plummet, the augur, glue, cement, sails for ships, the sail: yard, he also made statues with a device to make the eyes move as if they were living: he made also the Labyrinth, into which Minos put him and his sonne Icarus, because he made a cow of wood, wherein Palisphæ being put, a bull lay with her; then he desired feathers, and wax: to make a gift for the king, but he made himselfe and his son Icarus wings, and so flew from Crete to Sardinia, and from thence to Cuma, where he built a temple to Apollo, but Icarus soared so high, that the beams of the sunne melted the wax, and his wings failed; and so by this means he fell into the Icarian sea so called from him: Icarus Icaris nomina fecit aquis: vix. an. mu. 2574 circ. Gideonis tempora. The ground of this fable, is this. Dadalus being prius to the adultery of Palisphæ, the wife of Minos by his servant Taurus; was put in prison with his sonne Icarus; but he escaped with his son, and some other discontented men from Crete in some small ships: Minos pursued so hard, that Icarus his shippe was shattered on a rock. Dadalus overruled the king to Sicily, being the swifter, because he had then incurred his sayle clothes; when as all other men knew no speedier sayling than by the helpe of eares: whence the proverb. Remigis Dadalis, to signify a thing done with dexterity and speedily.

Dæta, Thyestis soror, cum qua congressus Thyestes Enorchum Dæmonem sustulit.

Democles, gr. id est, decus popular. A flatterer of Demetrius, or Dionysius the tyrant, who to show him the felicity of a king, attired him as a king, and set him at the table, seated as a king, and in the meane while hee was in his imperial robes, and delicate cares: hee having a noted sword with the point downward fastened his head, only tied by a haire, which when Democles perceived, he could not for his life sake of his pleasant meates, nor enjoy any comfort in the royall attendance he had, whereby Dionysius let him see how that the life of a tyrant in the middle of all princely pompe and royalty, is in continuall feare of death. vide Cic. Tull. quæst.

Democoon, gr. id est, populum intelligens; quæ Priamus his bastard which kept his fathers horses at Achylums, and was slain in the Trojan warre by Vlysses.

Democrates, δὲ μὲρ κῆρας, populum regens. A physician, a wrestler, a cogitate.

Democritus, δὲ μὲρ κῆρας, id est, populi index. An excellent philosopher who learned Astronomy of the Chaldeans; of the Persian Geometry, then came he to Athens, where he gave his goods to the weale publique: reserving onely a private garden, where he might more freely meditate on the workes of nature: hee laughed at the Athenians eager pursuit of riches and honour, when as their children for whom they provided them, were often dead before them: the Athenians thinking him to be mad, sent to him Hippocrates, who understanding the cause thereof told them, Democritus was not mad, but the Athenians were mad: he made himselfe blind by looking upon the brightness of a beehive, lest the beelings of excellently things should call away his mind from meditation: He would always laugh at the change of fortune and fortunes of men (as Heraclitus would worpe as them) whereof hee was also called.

Ilæ. sic Func. Or they were called Druides, because they had Oracles from Oaks, where Mustelæ grow. Certaine Magi, Priests in France, that built the city Aurelia or Orleans, a college, ann. mund. 2140. These were of old, the one of the two states in France, to wit, the spiritual, to whom was committed the care of providing of sacrifices, of prescribing laws for their Idolatrous worship, of the instruction and bringing up of their youth, of the settling of the art, of deciding of controversies amongst the people, concerning the bounds of their ground and such like. They had Oaks in great estimation, and all things that grew on them, especially Mustelæ, which they worshipped as a thing sent unto them from heaven. The manner of their sacrifice is thus related by one. Under an Oak whereon grew Mustelæ, they caused meat to be prepared, and two white Bulls to be brought forth, whose horns were first bound in, i. first fast in the yough. Then the Priest being clad in white, did climb up the tree, and having a bill of Goat in his hand, did thrust off the Mustelæ.

They offered they the sacrifices, praying that the gods might be propitious to the receivers, supposing that the beast which was killed, if it drinke of the Mustelæ should be fruitful, and that it was a remedy against all pains. It is supposed that the French borrowed this superstition from this Island of Britain. And Tacitus saith, that they were so ignorant in England, & thence France received them. This manner of worship (as Tacitus saith) was first prohibited in the time of Augustus.

Empedocles, gr. ἑμπεδοκλῆς, i. deus, id est, decus stabile. A Philosopher that wrote of the nature of things in Greeke verse (as Lucretius did in Latine) he taught that nothing living ought to be eaten, and that all things were composed of a loue and discord, and that the seat of the soule was not the heart nor the head, but the blood; he taught also that there were two haile circles compassing betwixt them the earth; the one whereof was compassed of fire, the other of aire, and that shee former made the day, and the latter, the night. The relation of his death, is by sundry writers thus set downe: that after his death he might be feared, he stole away from his company by night, and cast himselfe into the mouth of the burneing mountaine Aetna, that so the people finding him no where might conceiue he was taken up into heauen. But the two patterns which were cast up againe by the vehemency of the flame, betrayed all his policy: such desperate attempts will men undertake that doe it after honour, and are often cursed with the like croasse events: he would bee soone angry and then implacable, whence the proverbe in both these senses, Empedoclis simulas. Epæris. A Ile, one of the Cyclades called Hydrus.

Epaminondas. A noble man of Thebes, sonne of Polymnus, and a valiant warrior, a man of singular knowledge in the philosophy which Pythagoras taught, for the practice of all morall vertues, he was admired of all men in his time, and outstript by none; it was observed in him that he would never lie, neither in self, nor in earnest for his owne gaines. Hee overcame the Athenians, and the Lacedæmonians, and made Thebes during his time the Empire and chiefest city of Greece, which was both before him and after his death to other people. So farre was the power of one noble mind, did prince exceed the power of a whole common-wealth. At last in the battell at Mantinea, between the Thebans and the Lacedæmonians he was wound- ed to death with a long spear, the head remaining still in his body, yet his life continued untill he heard that his army had the victory, then hee commencing the top of the spear to be pulled out, said that hee had lived long enough, now to die winningly. And so in the great joy of his victory his blood and soule issued out of the same wound together. Hercules, de huius nominis Etym. optimè poeta. ἡρακλῆς δὲ ἐκ τοῦ ἡρᾶς καὶ κλέος, ἡρακλῆς δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἡρακλῆος καὶ κλέος, ἡρακλῆς δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἡρακλῆος καὶ κλέος, ἡρακλῆς δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἡρακλῆος καὶ κλέος. The source of iupiter and Alcmena: Græc. ἡρακλῆς quidam πῦρ τῆς αἰσῆς ἢ ἐκ τοῦ κλέος ἡρακλῆας, quod a Iunone gloriam adeptus sit, vel πῦρ τῆς αἰσῆς τῆς πῦρος, quia in terra erat gloriosus. Plura vide apud Etymol. Cicero lib. 3. de nat. Deorum 6. memorat hoc nomen fuisse appellatos: Varro 44. Veruntamen omnes qui recte tractant, ab Hercule Iouis & Alcmenæ filio (qui & Alcides voc.) appellatos fuisse efficit. Macr. Saturn. lib. 1. asserit Herculeum esse Solem. (ex eo nomine satis claret ἡρακλῆς: v. est ἡρακλῆς: i. acris gloria, quæ nil aliud est nisi Solis illuminatio) 12 vero labores quos Hercules confectisse creditur, sunt 12 signa Zodiaci, quæ Sol singulis annis conficit. Huic Herculi Alcmena filio (quem maxime nobilitavit, implacabile Iunonis odium) aliorum omnium, quotquot præcesserunt, labores tribuuntur, quorum 2 enumerat Calp. breuicatis ergo 12 tantum insignes commemorabo, omnibus cæteris omissis. 1 Hee (slew a Lion in the wood Nemæa. 2 He slew the monster Hydra, in the fennes of Lerna. 3 He slew the wild boar of Erymanthus, which wasted Arcadia. 4 He slew the Centaurs. 5 He took a stagge running on foot. 6 He slew the birds Symphalides, which ease up the fountains: 7 He cleansed Augæa's stable: vi. Hence arose these proverbs: Herculei labores, signifying a work impossible to be achieved. Herculis Cothurnos, signifying many words used to the expressing of some light matter. Frustra Herculi, signifying how vaine it is to dispraise those whom their works commend, it is occasioned by Iuno, which added more to Hercules his praise by seeking to defame him. Hercules & Simla, a proverb used to expresse an odious and vicerely comparison. Hercules hospitatur, when one is long a doing of a thing, as he used to be long at a feast before he could be full. Suidas interpreteth Hercules huic dicitur se Philosophus, by which he slew the dragon: i. natural concupiscence and her three evils or furies: viz. anger, covetousness, and pleasure. Atlas, called Egale, Archusa, and Hesperethusa: they had gardens and orchards, that bore golden fruits, which were kept by a vigilant dragon, which Hercules slew, and robbed the orchard.

Vanto thence these golden apples now borne, (which might in deed be called so, either for their shiny flowers were of the colour of gold, or so that the golden word signified, for it signified both a flower and an apple,) and the dragon was the Phoenix.

Ianus, dict. ab heb. p. Iain, id est vinum, eo quod primus vinum inuenerit vin. The most ancient king of Italy, amongst the Aborigines, ann. mund. 2529. ante n. Chr. 1319. that reigned Saturne, when his sonne Iupiter had banished him, and gave him a part of his kingdom, he taught him husbandry, and to coine money of brass, in which one side, had the picture of a ship, and the other the picture of Ianus: It is reported of him that he was the wisest of all kings, and knew things past and to come: therefore they pictured him with two faces, he was made a god after his death, and Numa built a temple unto him, which in the time of peace was shut, and in time of war was open: whence Iamni is called Pauleius and Clusius: others think that this temple was built by Tatius and Romulus, at their joining in league together, whence he was thought to have 2 faces, for the reference he had unto two kingdoms, then he is vniuersal: Iamnia thought by some to be the same that Ogyges and Noah, in Iaphet: whence he might be said to have 2 faces, the one looking backward, the other forward, the one looking upon the world before the flood, the other on the world after the flood: He is said to have come into Italy, in the golden age of the world (when there was no gold coyned) when men were iust; he taught men to plant vines, &c. and to offer sacrifices, and to live temperately. Fabius Pictor thus says of him: Iuic Ianus sacerdos, & vir religiosus, doctus Philosophus ac Theologus; fuit, inquam, pater hominum & deorum, caput & rectore totius primi humani generis à quo magni & lati orbis pendebar custodia vxorem Vestam aiunt eum habuisse, Ianus is also a place in Rome, where vsurers meet.

no other thing than a golden fleece hanging in the temple: longit. 65, lat. 29. Caus.

Medea, gr. μεδεια, confilium. A notable sorceress, the daughter of Ætæa. She entertained and lodged Iason, together with the rest of the Argonauts at Colchoos, and falling in love with him, and being afraid lest her husband should return alive, she knowing the danger that her wits so undergo, upon promise that he would marry her, she taught him how he should tame the brazen footed bull, and so cast the Dragon that watched the golden fleece into a dead sleep, and so to stay him, which he did, and got the golden fleece: then she flying away with Iason, took her young brother Apsyrtus with her: she false promising them, she lured her brother, and cut him in many pieces, and threw them in the way, that so her father being busied about gathering of them up, they might escape his pursuit: as Iason they came to Theffaly, where by her prayers: she restored youth and vigor to Iasons old father Ælion: she had two children by Iason, and at length Iason forsook her, and married Creusa, the daughter of Creon, King of Corinth; wherewith Medea being enraged, sent fire in a box as a token to Creusa; she opening the box, the fire burst forth and burned her, and the whole Palace. Iason at this would have slain her, but she took both her children that she had by Iason, and flew them in his sight, and fled to Athens, and married to old Ægeus, and had by him a son called Medus, and took this son, and raised clouds and winds, and by them was carried into that part of Asia, which is called Media. vide Iason.

but kept were Thebes, and desired many passengers that came that way; Apollo told them that hee would not be overcome, till some man had exposed him to riddle, and it was this:
What creature is that, that in the morning goeth with foure feete, and at noon with two, and at night with three feete? they that tooke upon them to expound any riddle, bee expressed and misse, were killed. Creon king of Thebes made a Proclamation over all Greece, that if any man could expound his riddle, hee should have his free locall to his wife; Oedipus understoode it, and said it was a Man, who in his infancy went on all foure, his middle age on two legges, and when hee is old on three, that is, hee useth a staffe: as which exposition Sphinx was so grieved, that hee threw himselfe downe the rocke and brake his necke. So the fable: the truth is, he was a riddler, whose cruelty was signified by those parts of wild beasts which hee was faied to have, and his riddle was (strange) that which he drew men, and there killed them, if by their strength they could not free themselves, as Oedipus did, slaying him; for which cause the Thebanes

TO THE READER.

Courteous Reader, I may seeme to some over bold in setting forth a new treasure of words to the world, when the works of so honourable and learned men, who have laboured in this kinde, are so learnedly penned, and highly esteemed. In truth I must, and do most willingly confesse, that neither in age, wit, learning or experience, I am to be compared with the least of them; nay, unfit to carry the books, where some of the honourable Learned should reade the Lecture; whose learned labours have yeelded these many yeares to England great profit. Yet notwithstanding, considering the great utilitie of a Dictionary, whose matter is manifold, and use generall, and also that no one Dictionary, as yet extant, hath the English before the Latine, with a full Index of all such Latine words as are in any one common Dictionary amongst us: and because the poore estate of most students is not able to furnish themselves with all such Dictionaries, their severall prices amounting to so much, and also weighing the great want that poore scholars have, in not having most, or all of the common Dictionaries: I have thought it good therefore, for thy benefit, courteous Reader, to epitomize and contract the learned workes of all the learnedst and best Dictionaries in England with vs now extant, into a lesser roome, reducing all those learned Volumes into a portable Enchiridion, and into so great treasures to cast, for thy use. Some small mites of my own, which amount to foure thousand words more than any one Dictionary now extant affords, which I have done not without great paines and charges: which beaue burthen of charge, if it had not been supported by the Right Honourable, my very good Lord, the Earle of Suffex, and the Right worshipfull Master William Waade Esquire, one of the Clerkes of her Maiesties most Honourable privie Counsell, with other of my good loving parishioners of Earmosby neere London; and good friends in and neere Banburie, it might have been said of me, as it was of the foolish builder, This man began to build, but was not able to make an end. But at last, though long, by Gods providence, it is come to this issue, that I must present it (howsoever it be finished) to thy courteous view and friendly censure: requesting thee to reprove with iudgement charitably, what I have over past in haste: in recompence whereof, I will be no lesse willing to reforme, than thy courtesie to admonish. Thus assuring myselfe, that thou (learned Reader) wilt my faultes escaped, either with thy pen correct, or in courtesie concale, remembering that the shadowes of young painters may have some blemishes, and first editions of young writers (yea, and best workes) some faultes, I commit thee (Gentle Reader) to his tuition, that must presents thee and me faultlesse, in his owne righteousness, before the great Iudge at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.
